

Success could only describe May's GE seminar in Greece.

Generation Europe was promoted successfully among the participants. Both students and well-known professors in Greece and abroad, attended the seminar on 4th May at the European Parliament in Athens. There were approximately 50 participants from different universities.

European Union, its role and ideals, and European Parliament in particular were discussed thoroughly among the many topics of the seminar. Professors encouraged students to participate in the upcoming Euro elections in June 2009. More specifically, the seminar's first topic for discussion was the role of the European Parliament and its history since 1950's along with its future competences. Later on we focused on the Euro elections where the Administrator of the European Parliament's annex in Greece analysed statistics and facts from the euro-barometer surveys and talked about the significance of voting.

Next topic was about the new dimension in euro-atlantic relations after President's Obama election. Professors mentioned the positive attitude and expectations of people for cooperation between the two sides of the Atlantic.

Last but not least, our discussion passed on the current economic crisis and the EU actions and policies to alleviate the problems. Both participants and professors were pleased to take part in the seminar and expressed their many congratulations.

Apart from this, there was a prolonged discussion about Generation Europe. There were questionnaires on health survey distributed and many brochures and small gifts from GE were given.

From our side, we would like to thank the following professors for their cooperation and support in the seminar:

Asderaki Fotini,
Farantouris Nikos,
Papasotiriou Harris,
